Introduction

The main aim of the seminar is to bring together representatives of all institutions working with adults with special needs (the focus of the seminar will be on visually impaired, deaf and hard hearing adults, adults with intellectual disabilities and Physically disabled adults) across Europe in order to meet prospective partners, develop project idea and get advice on how to transform project idea into good quality application for funding. The seminar will be accompanied with the international conference on the same topic in organisation with the Association of Slovene Adult Education Centres.

The Theme

Despite modern legislation and policy proposals at European level, people with disabilities and their families still face social exclusion and discrimination in their everyday lives. Therefore also in the LLP the persons with special needs are an important target group, offering several different possibilities to address their needs: mobility, partnerships and development projects. This target group needs different approaches and methods, to raise awareness of their particular needs, and problems faced to increase their numbers taking part in education and training.

We would like to offer all interested in inclusion of adults with special needs into education and training to exchange their experiences, ideas and methods at the seminar, to initiate new projects helping this vulnerable target group to become better prepared for their everyday life.

Actions

The National agency will facilitate match-making between international partners and together with the representative of EACEA present opportunities offered by LLP. There are many ways how to increase cooperation through European grants, including:

- Mobility of individuals (Leonardo Mobility projects, Grundtvig individual grants, Study visits);
- Partnerships (multilateral cooperation of institutions);
- Multilateral projects and networks (concrete and innovative results/products).

International mobility is an important opportunity for educational institutions, as well as for individuals. It allows the individual to gain (or test) valuable and specific skills abroad. It enables the educational institutions to enrich their offer and reach out to the markets.

Partnerships (multilateral cooperation from at least 3 different countries) aim to enable participants to work with partners from across Europe to share practice, discuss problems and compare solutions on a particular topic. They can cover any topic in adult and VET education and training.

Multilateral projects and networks are undertaken by institutions from different participating countries working together, pooling knowledge and experience, in order to achieve concrete and innovative results/products with indisputable European value. In many cases, this will involve piloting experiences in strategic areas, producing teaching products of high quality and improving the quality of training systems through the development of innovative contents, methods and procedures. Within Leonardo program such transnational co-operation projects are called Transfer (TOI) or Development (DOI) of innovation and are aimed at improving the quality of training systems through the development or transfer of innovative contents.
